

Reality Check

It turns out the Right still isn't quite beyond the whole "imagine if the sides were reversed" thought process.

Below is an article from Raw Egg Nationalist, someone who I'm not hostile to & occasionally read. I also follow him on Xwitter, and he has been whining about this for a while. He's not the only one, much of my feed is currently conservatives & other center-right types clutching their pearls because redditors are calling for violence or vandalizing Teslas. It seems that the conservative mind is still completely blind to the reality between ideological conflict. Credit where it's due, libertarian types aren't being as retarded.

Vandalism & political violence are common, in fact they're more normal historically than drawn out periods of peace. It's only been about 30 years since America & Britain faced domestic unrest like the IRA or Weatherman Underground. With a new RW springing up over the last decade, increasing sympathy for radical ideologies, and the amount of pressure put on the Left since the inauguration, all of this was inevitable. So inevitable, in fact, that I predicted it before the election. Almost like I know what I'm talking about, crazy.

Anyone who couldn't predict that retard leftoids weren't going to start doing their typical vandalism is a moron. We've had 10 years of AntiFa, BLM, and similar groups throwing rocks & burning shit down. Even if these were just small minority groups, the Left as a whole broadly supported all of it. Any RW victory, even a marginal one like the Trump admin, was going to result in this. They're like toddlers throwing a tantrum, the only way to avoid it is to give them everything they want, which isn't a viable option.

The answer for leftists becoming more militant isn't to whine about it online, it's to become militant in return. Even if it's just a defensive measure. Don't like leftoids spray painting cybertrucks? Go find a Prius with a I'm With Her sticker & smash the fucking windshield.

These people aren't actually upset about the principle of some dork taking shots at Trump or torching a Tesla dealership. What they're really scared of is the next step, because they know that it will inevitably escalate. They're scared because while pseudo-intellectuals bitch & moan online, some of these leftoid freaks are taking steps for real change. Any victory for the RW claimed by the new administration can easily be undone by subversive elements in the government. Even worse, once leftists realize that their typical mouthpieces (media organizations, non-profits, etc.) are simply being ignored & defunded they will inevitably be further radicalized. The fact that conservative outlets were simply ignored for so long was a significant factor in the rise of the AltRight & Dissident Right, along with the radical strains alongside them.

It's easy to see why the spike in leftist radicalism is concerning, it puts everything at risk. To make matters worse, many elements of the right have a neurotic obsession with any twinge of radicalism occurring on the right because it "makes us look bad." This is where the optics cucking & fed accusations start. This leads to many outright antagonizing any militant elements from Oath Keepers to accelerationists. The consequence is that no one is coming to defend them when rounds start flying, and political violence may end up being very one sided.

The real answer to the issue of lefty radicalism is our own radicalism. That was always the answer, the only reason mainstream conservatives don't support it is because any authentic RW group is hostile to them too. The side that wins will always be the side that actually wants to win.

Funnily enough, much of the dedicated RW is already falling behind the more apolitical RW in this regard. Dedicated referring to people who post about politics & such, apolitical referring to people who are only tangentially connected to politics. GarandThumb, the most popular gun youtuber, has posted several videos (indirectly) teaching how to be guerrilla fighter. He also commonly makes tongue & cheek 'jokes' about ignoring gun laws & all that. This isn't too surprising coming from the modern gun community, but it's still more radical than most RW influencers are willing to dabble in. Most similar gun influencers are in the same boat, part of the new breed of anti-government types that spend more time complaining about Israel than "those damn liberal snowflakes."

This sort of sentiment has been popular, even more so than actual political issues, across the apolitical RW for years. The spread of the Boogaloo movement, regardless of how cringy it was, is indicative of this. There is ample space for radicalism on the right, not only in ideology but in action. This doesn't mean we need high profile commentators or politicians calling for a race war, just to offer the same level of support for RW radicals that the Left has offered for their own from Berkeley to Minneapolis. Blame the socioeconomic factors. Fiery but mostly peaceful protest. All that. This also means lower level influencers need to promote these radicals to some extent, just like leftoid influencers don't shy away from supporting AntiFa & other radicals. It's widespread for them to support Hamas, you really think it's the end of the world to support some RW activists.

Gaining mass support for Hamas in post-9/11 America can't be more difficult than supporting Atomwaffen Division if you wanted to.

Civil unrest is here to stay. There's going to more vandalism, more arson attacks, more assassination attempts. That's the consequences of winning, especially against a cohort that consistently scores high on all sorts of mental illness. The FBI & its sister agencies have been effectively neutered by the new admin so they won't even be able to effectively to control the situation like they did before. The honeypot & informant money is dried up. The only question is how do we respond.

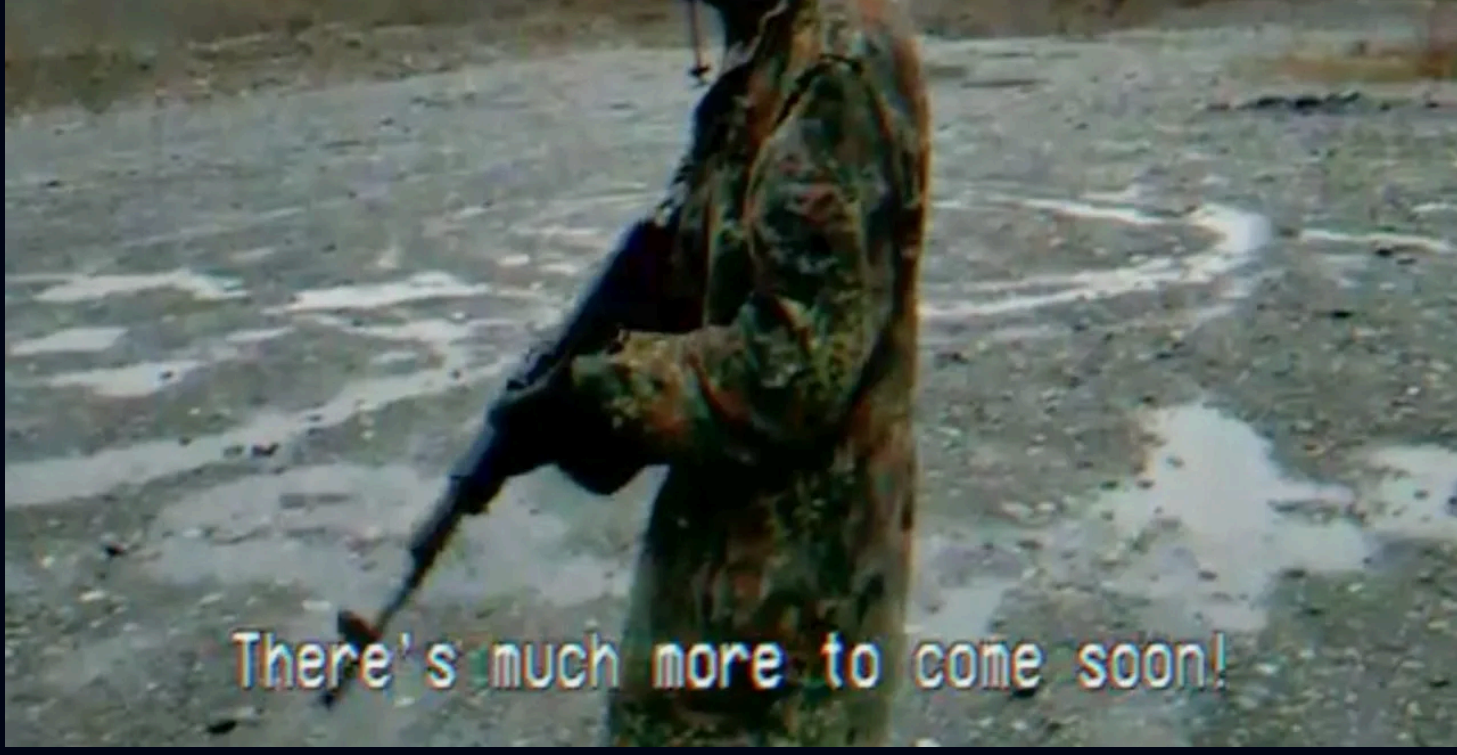

Fortunately, my readers should be well aware due to my previous articles. To catch up, here are some relevant ones: The Collapse & Post-America, Natural Selection & Leaderless Resistance, Offensive Insurgency, Years of Lead, Balkanization.

I may make a dedicated reading list for radicalism in the future.

I don't necessarily condone you forming a cell & doing some 'activism', it's just good to know how these things develop even if your only intention is to keep you & your family safe. All the leftoids that have spent years ignoring Islamic terrorist attacks, openly wishing death on those that didn't lock themselves inside during COVID & much more didn't magically disappear after January 20th. They're still there & without the government support they've begun looking for alternative means to carry out the objectives. These are still the same people that Sam Hyde spoke of, the ones that "want you dead, your children raped & they think it's funny."

This isn't accelerationists yelling the end is near from some niche web forum anymore, it's the reality of life on earth rearing its beautiful head once more. "It makes no difference what men think of war. War endures." You can't run forever.

Hail Victory.

I'm broadly sympathetic to this argument but it has to be said that a significant difference is leftist Antifa types are nearly always losers with not much if anything to lose. The mugshots of those arrested are invariably a horror-show gallery of fuggos, freaks, and misfits.

Whereas the core of the American right wing is basically middle class white men. The bar is a lot higher for them to escalate to violence, especially organized violence, given they have so much more to lose.

Teslas getting attacked is funny because the majority of Tesla drivers ARE still committed shillbills. I'm even tempted to believe that angle of it is just underclass resentment driven under the guise of 'Elon bad'

This is another article taking aim at something that's generally associated with the left, and recontextualizing it.
